Sees Revenues in Peril. "If expenditures continue at this rate," cautioned Mr. Fess, "until the end of the year we will have used up all available revenues from both borrowing and tax sources. On January 1 we will have a deficit of $2,000,000,000, with six months still to be accounted for. Every one knows that a persistently deter-mined effort is being made to maintain agencies that were purely war agencies on the theory that the country will suffer if they are discontinued. The investigation must go on continuously. We cannot see the end of it."

"The War Department," continued Mr Mondell, "ordinarily spends from $125, 000,000 to $130,000,000 a year. Since the United States entered the war this department has expended $15,000,000,000. One division of the War Department has paid out more than $4,000,000,000.

"Manifestly these vast expenditures should be audited, examined and in-quired into regardless of whether the Republicans or the Democrats are in control of Congress. We are proposing nothing more than the Democrats would propose if they were in control of the House.

"We are not taking up this matter in a spirit of endeavor to make politi-cal capital notwithstanding suggestions which have been made to that effect, but we are going into it because it is our duty to make such an audit and exami-nation as will properly inform the American people of the great expendi-tures made during the war."
